Dear Norman:

We have enjoyed our contact with ISES over the past several months and have become firmly convinced that the Second Income Plan is the answer that we have been searching for to achieve a just and equitable settlement of the Alaskan Native land claims. Congress clearly would like to resolve this issue in 1970, but we feel that they are still groping for a solution that would satisfy the United States Government, the State of Alaska, and, most importantly, the Native Alaskans themselves.

As a Native leader and founder of the Alaskan Slope Natives Association, I am convinced that the Second Income Plan would not only be a substantial tax boon and savings for millions of hard-pressed American taxpayers but would allow the Natives to gain economic justice and share equitably in the wealth of the lands that they will be surrendering when their title to their lands are extinguished.

As you know, the Government now spends about $8,500 for "welfare" and administration for every Native household whose annual income now averages about $1,800. The Second Income Plan would convert the very concept of "welfare" into something of interest only to historians.

We hope that the Second Income Plan can be presented to Congress in February. In the meantime, Mr. Pope and I will be in Alaska building support for the idea. At least one of us will be returning to Washington in January to continue our lobbying efforts in behalf of Native Alaskans.

I hope your holidays are enjoyable and prosperous.

Sincerely,

Charles Edwardsen
